Is the Ceylon Lost?

"The Ceylon has either gone on beach somewhere or else has been sent . down to her last port in Davey Jones' locker." This is the general belief along the long overdue bark Ceylon from Laysan Island. It is now 75 days since the bark left Honolulu on her voyage to Laysan Island and return. This voyage should not have required more than 30 days, and it is generally conceded now that the vessel is pau. The Ceylon is one of the oldest vessels in the Honolulu trade. She was built in Maine, and for years was used in transporting oil and bone from the whaling fleet in Honolulu to Boston. Captain Henry Calhoun, who was her master for many years, used to say that she soaked up so much oil on those voyages that her timbers would last forever. She brought many people to the islands in the early days.

Special facilities will be afforded for the study of entomology, zoology, botany, deep-sea dredging, and commercial products. "The organization and discipline will be that of the United States Navy, modified to meet the conditions. The ship itself will be worked by a competent crew of sailors. The cadets will never be called upon for manual labor, except sail and spar drills for gymnastic exercise. They will, however, be taught to hand, reef and steer, theoretical navigation, and dynamo and steam engineering. The development of personal honor and manliness will be the aim of the moral training. Two regular physicians will be on board and have continual oversight of the health of the cadets and their environment. A competent director will have charge of the physical development.
